

MANAGING EDITORS

Relationship building

You want to build a genuine relationship with anybody that works for you - why? They will see your relationship as more than transactional and they'll enjoy working with you a lot more (the main motivating factor will be more than just money)

How can you do this?

- Ask about their personal lives on your calls before you talk about business
- Check in on them frequently
- Joke around with them
- Genuinely support them on their goals

Note: MONEY SHOULD NOT BE THE MOST IMPORTANT REASON WHY SOMEBODY CHOOSES TO WORK WITH YOU

Lead through motivation - Accountability

This is super important aspect of editor management - you don't wanna lead through fear and disrespect or you also don't want to be too lenient to the point where they don't take you seriously

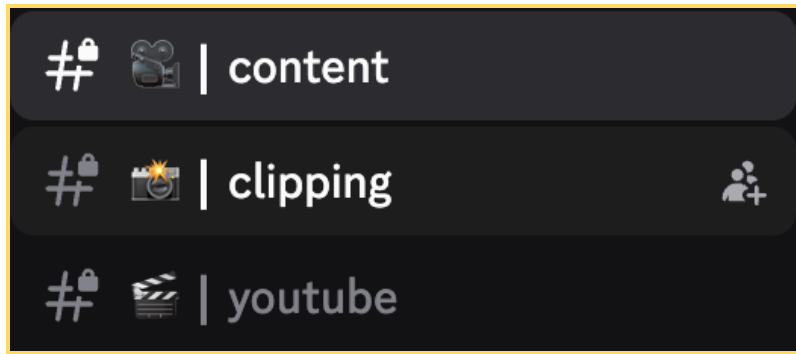

You wanna lead through their personal motivation - that is why it's so important to understand their goals because whenever they mess up you don't want to be pissed off at them you want to be pissed off for them because their failure to meet expectations is directly stopping them from achieving their goals

You want your editor to feel like shit not because you shouted at them for messing up but because they're stopping themselves from achieving

How to prevent mess-ups

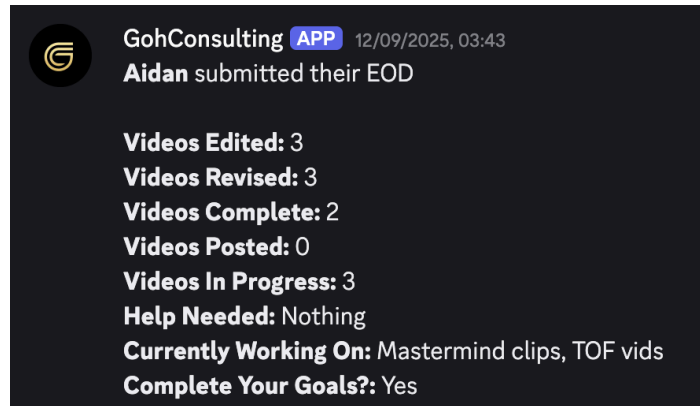

- Teach them the consequences of messing up and not fixing the issues
- Get them to reverse engineer why they messed up (teaches self accountability)
- Teach them the importance of overdelivering

Communication Channels

You want to ensure that editors of clear channels for communication to occur this is how you remain organized within your business and avoid clustered messages with different departments in your business

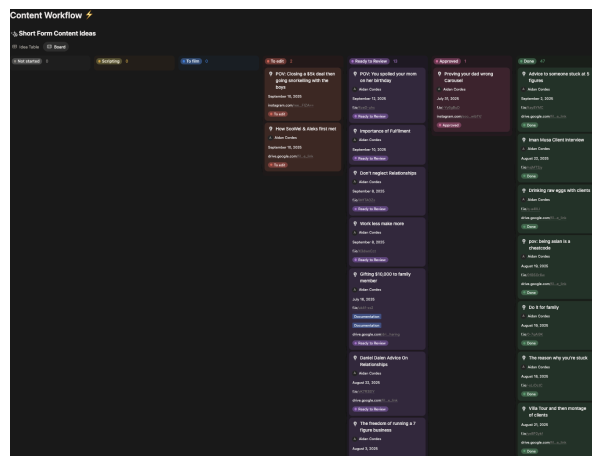

Accountability Channels

As a business owner you always want an understanding of what's happening within operations

It is also good to keep your editors accountable and you can do this by getting them to implement an EOD report

Content Systems

This will give you a good overview of what content is in the pipeline and it will also be a place where you can locate all videos that are being worked on - instead of scrolling up a chat where videos can be lost
